Post University Joins the Blogosphere

New blog features dialogue on the future of higher education and the people, places, and personalities that make up life at Post University

WATERBURY, Conn.—February 8, 2011—Post University, a student-focused university offering on-campus and online programs, today introduced its new blog at <http://blog.post.edu>. The blog is part of the school's effort to participate in the national discussion about the future of higher education and to provide insight and peer support to both on-campus and online students. Written by Post University's students, faculty, and staff, the blog will share their experiences of life at Post, as well as their perspectives on the educational issues that matter most through articles, podcasts, videos, Skypecasts, photos, and presentations.

The debut of the new blog features several posts penned by the school's deans, scholar-practitioners, and administrators, including:

- Jane Bailey, Ed.D., Dean of the School of Education, who played a major role in the development of Post University's Master of Education program.
- Don Mroz, Ph.D., Dean of the Post University School of Business, a change management expert who has counseled major corporations such as Ford Motor Company, and has been instrumental in the development of Post University's online MBA degree program.
- Edmund J. Lizotte (LTC-ret.), Director of Military Programs and Veterans Affairs, who helped build Post University into a leading educator of American military personnel and their families.

The Post University blog will also feature commentary by students, including undergraduates, adult learners, online students, alumni, active duty military personnel, and veterans. In addition, the University is using the blog as a forum to share views on the future of higher education in America. It will publish posts by and interviews with educators, business leaders, and policymakers in the Waterbury, Conn., area and around the country. The blog's editors aspire to reflect the news, issues, and trends that matter most to its bloggers and readers, such as how new technologies are changing education and the growth in online learning.

Examples of how Post's bloggers are covering these topics include:

- Seven ways to make better use of technology in the classroom, a plan for transforming our classrooms into agile organizations that can quickly adopt advancing technologies for improved learning.
- Military couple stays committed to higher education, a first-hand account from Sgt. 1st Class Bryan Donisi about why and how he and his wife Verlean are building their business knowledge at Post University together.

- A master of education degree online?, a student success story proving that adult learners can get their M.Ed. online.
- Basketball coach Al Sokaitis cautiously optimistic after Eagles' win against Felician College, a podcast interview with Post University's head basketball coach on what he thinks it will take for his NCAA Division II Eagles to take home the Central Atlantic Collegiate Conference title.
- Post Theatrical Players Present Neil Simon's "Rumors." behind-the-curtain video footage of Post University's student actors and actresses rehearsing for their next big performance.

"The beauty of the blogosphere is that it provides a forum where our faculty and students can share their views and talk about their experiences in a way that provides an accurate slice of life at Post University's physical and online campuses, as well as insight into how issues in education are affecting us all," says Ronald W. Ogrodnik, Ph.D., President of Post University. "We want our new blog to be the place where readers can find the most authentic picture of the experiences, perspectives, and culture that make up Post University, both in the real world and digital universe."

The public and the press are invited to visit the Post University blog daily or subscribe to the blog's RSS feed. Comments are invited (and moderated). Journalists and bloggers interested in learning more about the blog or interviewing Post University faculty can contact Michelle Larkin at Michelle@GregoryFCA.com or 610-228-2117.
