

POST UNIVERSITY KICKS OFF NEW YEAR WITH TWO CAREER FAIRS

University has openings for as many as 50 area residents

WHAT: Post University will start the new year with two career fairs in an effort to match as many as 50 local job-seekers with full-and part-time positions between now and May. Connecticut's fastest growing university has a wide array of openings for people with different skill and experience levels.

Available full-time positions include admissions counselors, academic advisors, and a sales trainer to support the University's growing online student population. The University also has high-level, on-campus openings for a Dean of the School of Public Service and Dean of Post College, and two directorships for undergraduate and graduate business programs.

In addition, the University is seeking a Director of Career Services, as well as qualified academic program managers who can support undergraduate and graduate degree programs that are offered on-campus and online to students of all ages. Part-time positions include openings for adjunct professors in a number of areas.

Post University offers a competitive salary, health and tuition benefits, a 401k program, flexible work schedules for many positions, and regular opportunities for career advancement. Applicants who cannot attend the Career Fairs are encouraged to submit a resume and three letters of recommendation to:
