Jane Bailey, Ed.D. was recently appointed as the Dean of Post University's School of Education. Previously, she served as Academic Program Manager for Graduate Education and was instrumental in the creation of the Post University Master of Education degree program. She currently teaches several courses within the program and brings more than 25 years higher education experience to the University.

Prior to coming to Post University, Dr. Bailey was an associate professor of education and chairman of the education department at Christopher Newport University where she taught courses in curriculum and instruction, early literacy, and reading instruction, and supervised practicum experiences. Additionally, she supervised district-based master's degree projects for Virginia Commonwealth University.

At The College of William and Mary in Virginia, Dr. Bailey supervised student teachers and worked at the Center for Gifted Education as a coordinator of school-university partnership projects, curriculum developer, grant writer, and coordinator of Saturday and summer programs for gifted learners. In addition, Dr. Bailey taught elementary school in New York, California and New Hampshire and served as a district reading consultant.

She has written several major grants and directed a federally-funded Teaching American History project for a large urban school division in Virginia. She also worked as a business developer for the education team of CNA, a research and analysis company in Alexandria, Virginia.

Dr. Bailey holds an Ed.D. in Higher Education from the College of William and Mary, a Master of Arts in Education (curriculum & instruction) from San Diego State University, and a Bachelor of Arts in Elementary Education (minor in literature) from the State University of New York College at Oneonta.
